Warsaw, September 7. N. S.

THE General Dyet met here the 29th of the last month; but there arising great Disputes between the Deputies of Great and Little Poland, and Lithuania, about the Choice of their Mareschal, or Speaker; each of these Provinces desiring to have one of their Body placed in this Station; 'twas the first of this Month before they could agree therein, and then they Elected the Sieur Thruchsi, and sent three Deputies to acquaint the Archbishop and Senators therewith, who returned the Compliment. The second and third were spent in Debates concerning such of the Deputies who were complained against, as not being duly Chosen: But at last the Consideration of this Matter was laid aside, till after they had attended the Primate and Senators according to Custom. On the 5th they repaired to the Senate Chamber, where the Archbishop was Seated under a Canopy of State, at a little distance from the Throne where the King used to sit. The Mareschal made his Address to him, lamenting the Death of the late King, commending the Zeal and Care of the Primate, and offering whatever was in the Power of the Dyet for advancing the Common Good. The Primate made a Speech in answer thereunto, and proposed to them an Union among themselves, and Confederacy of the whole Republick, as has been usual in like Occasions for their Common Security; The agreeing upon Articles to be observed by the new King, by which the Irregularities committed during former Governments may be prevented for the future; The Paying off the Arrears of the Army with all possible Expedition, and the Prosecution of the War against the Turks; The making proper Regulations to Remedy the Badness of the Money; and lastly, The deferring the Election of a new King till the Spring. The Dyet have since had these Matters under Consideration.

Vienna, Sept. 12. Having already given a particular Account of the late Battle in Hungary, we have only to add at present; That according to the freshest Advices the Imperial Army continued Encamped near the River Theyss; and the Turks near Temeswar: The former, by the Reinforcement they had received under the Command of Lieutenant-General Staremberg, and the other Troops that had joined them, were stronger than before the Fight; and had sent out several Parties to watch the Enemies Motions, resolving, in case they moved towards Transilvania, to march that way likewise by the way of Chonad; and if they return to the Danube and repass that River (which last seems the most probable) the Germans will march towards Peter-Waradin. The Rhingrave, and several Officers that were wounded in the late Battle, have been brought hither; and the Regiments of Baden, Staremberg and Salm, who suffered the most, are sent into Quarters. If there be no likelihood of further Action, the Elector of Saxony will return hither very soon, leaving the Command of the Forces under General Capraroa. The Emperor has sent for the Count of Styrum, to be General of the Horse in Hungary, in the Place of General Heusler, Count de Hettershim. Several Couriers have of late past'd between this Court and Piedmont, to inform the Emperor with what passes there, and to carry back Orders to the Imperial Forces, in relation to the Prosecution of the War on that side.

Mentz, Sept. 18. We have received from the Confederate Camp, under the Command of Prince Lewis of Baden, the following Journal of their Proceedings since their passing the Rhine at and near this Place. On the 3d instant we marched to Nierstein, and understood that the Landtgrave of Hesse was come with the Forces under his Command to Creutznach. The 4th we rested. The 5th we marched to Westhofen, where was our Right; and our Left at Osthofen, where we received advice, that the Mareschal de Choiseul had not passed the Spierbach, as was reported; and that he was Encamped at Walsheim, between Rildhutz and Spire; and that his Troops were very much Harassed: We took a Courier sent by the Marquis de Harcourt to the Mareschal de Choiseul, giving an account of his March, and that he had with him 19 Batealions, and 39 Squadrons, but they were but weak, making together not above 10000 Men, though it was given out they were 14000. We understood likewise that the French had reinforced the Garrisons of Philipsburg and Landau, and had supplied these Places with all other things necessary for their Defence. Prince Lewis sent some Troops to make an Incursion into the Upper Alsace, where the Allarm is very great, the Country People leaving their Houses, and flying to the Towns. The 6th we marched towards Worms and Pfedersheim, and Encamped between these two Places: We were informed that the Landtgrave was come the day before to Kirkeim, were he took a small Castle, a French Captain with 20 Men, who were posted there, surrendring at Discretion. The 7th we marched to Lampsheim, and the Landtgrave (who Encamped the 6th at Merxheim, on the Prim) advanced within half a League of Neuflinange: In the Evening Prince Lewis and the Landtgrave met and conferred together, and upon advice that the Mareschal de Choiseul had upon our approach, passed the Spierbach, and posted his Army on the other side, it was resolved that the Landtgrave should march towards Dursheim, where he should place his Right, and his Left towards us: This was done on the 8th. The 9th Prince Lewis and the Landtgrave had another Conference, and all things were agreed on for the two Armies joining together; as they did the 10th, near Haselach. We had advice that 10000 French were posted on the Spierbach, and the Mareschal de Choiseul lay with the rest of the Army not far from thence; and that he had sent a strong Detachment towards the Upper Alsace, to defend that Country against the Incursions of the Allies. The 11th we advanced towards Neustadt, near which Place the Enemy had posted themselves very advantageously on the other side of the Spierbach, and we Encamped in sight of them. The 12th and 13th we raised several Batteries, to Cannonade
